The jolly man, who can even speak Dutch, is working a holiday position at a department store. He breaks policy and directs a shopper to the rival store which sells the item they want, which spreads goodwill about his store. He passes a psychological evaluation but is confined after hitting the examiner. The post office "confirms" the jolly man's identity by delivering thousands of letters from kids to the courthouse. The little girl convinces the judge to acquit the jolly man by slipping him a dollar bill.

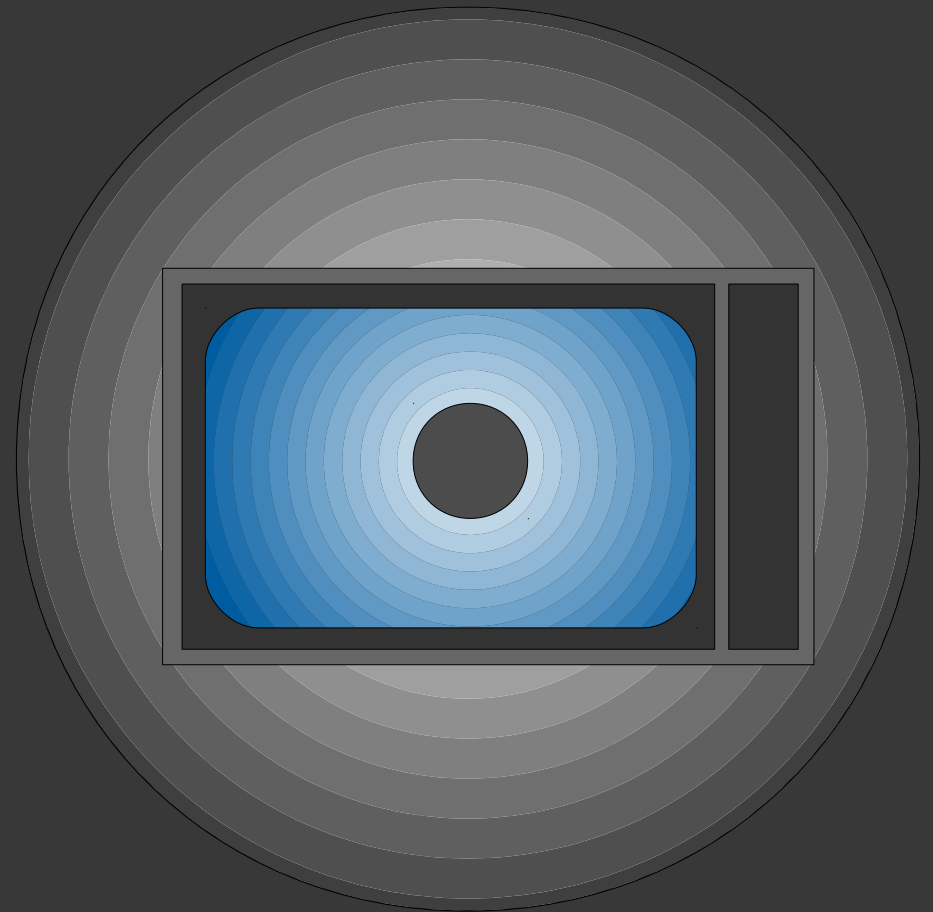

A crew of WWII veterans plots to rob several desert resorts. They cause a blackout as a diversion to steal the money and dump it in the garbage. Unfortunately, the crew's electrician dies of a heart attack during the operation. An ex-mobster tracks them down and extorts them for half the winnings. The crew makes off with the money in the end.

A songwriter lives with his dog before meeting his wife and her own dog. The pets have puppies, and the wife's boss offers to buy them but is rebuffed. The ex-schoolmate steals the puppies, and their parents team up with a dog, horse, and cat to rescue them. The puppies escape as the boss falls into a vat of molasses and is arrested. Reunited, their owners adopt all the puppies, and the husband releases a hit videogame.

The family lives in a quiet community where the father works in real estate. The son finds a box of clown dolls, the daughter is sucked into the wall, and the parents learn from friends over dinner that their house was built over a cemetery. The family brings in paranormal investigators, one of whom in turn calls in her psychic ex-boyfriend. The son, feeling guilty, enters the wall after the daughter and they both successfully escape. Later, as the family searches for a new house, they coincidentally visit an eerily similar house.

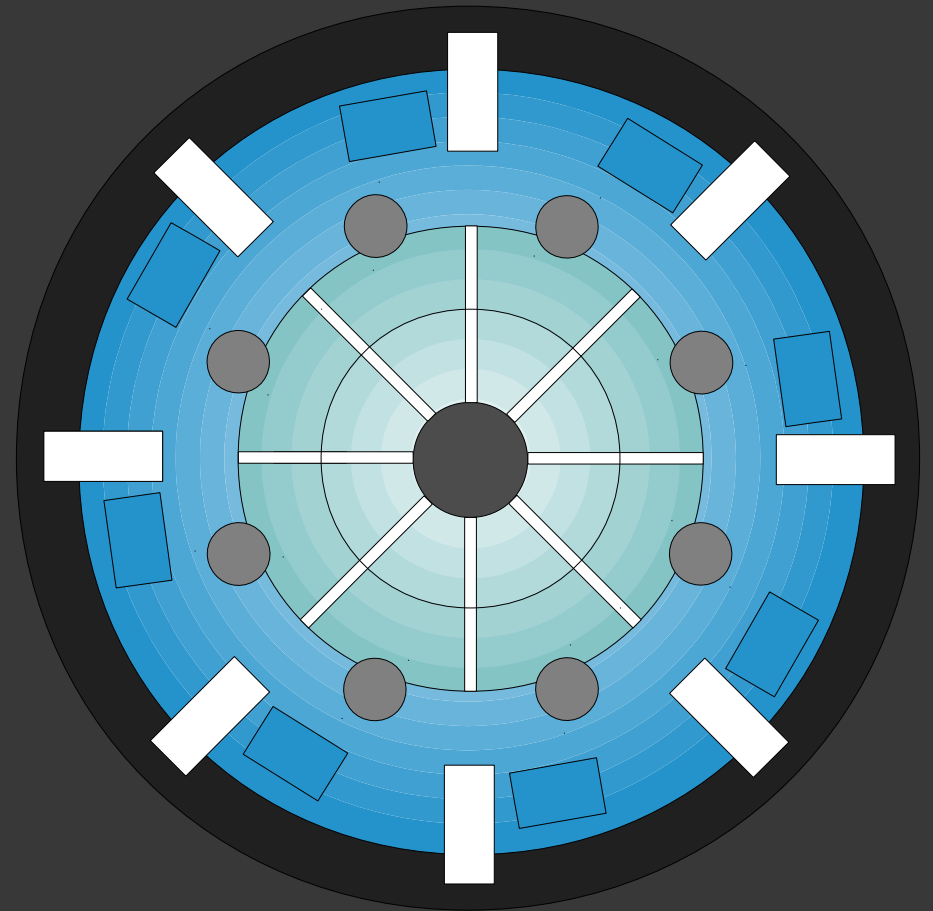

The male scientists discover that spirits are real. They rent an office above a Chinese restaurant and start an extermination business. They learn that a lone occultist is causing the increase in spirit activity by planting devices along ley lines. The occultist kills himself and takes the form of the spirit from their business's logo, terrorizing the city. They defeat the evil god and save the day by crossing the streams.

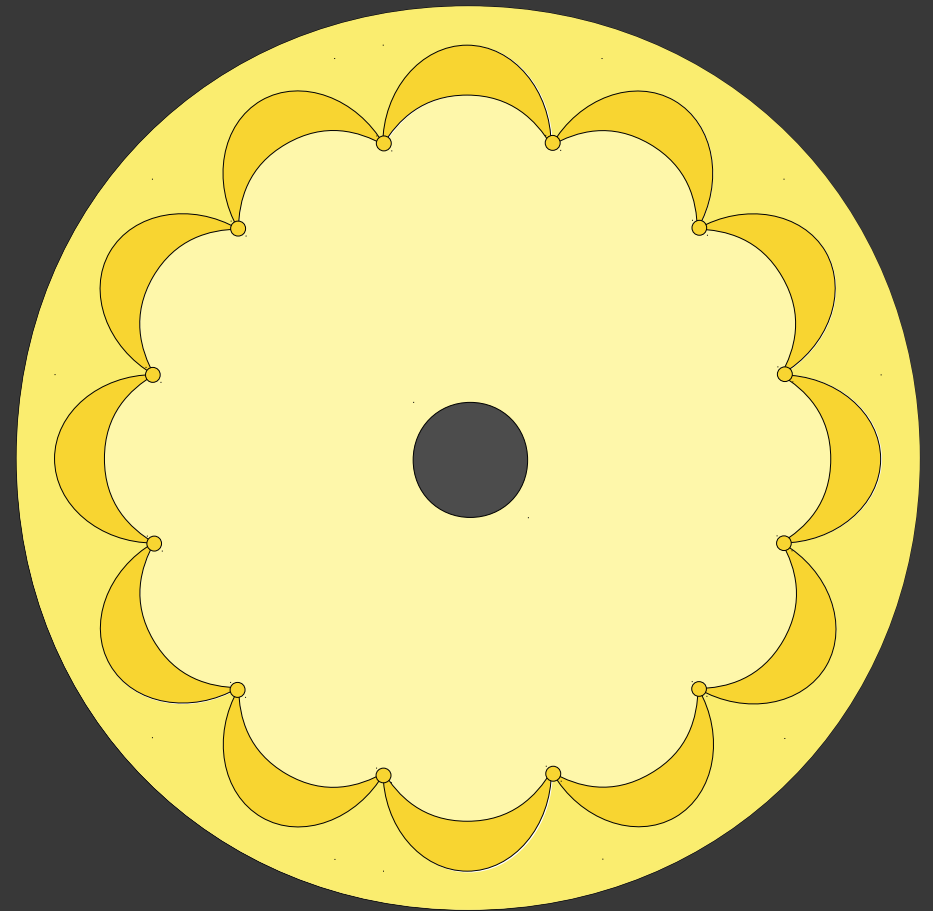

A law banning militarized drones within the United States inconveniences a corporation. In response, it transforms a police officer who was shot to death into a cyborg. The cyborg is initially unaware of his origins but learns from his ex-partner. During a police strike to protest underfunding, the cyborg kills his killer using his data spike. The corporate boss fires a corrupt executive, freeing the cyborg from his hidden prime directive.

The human colony on Mars is rebelling. On Earth, the hero pays a company to alter his memories, but they wipe his memory and kick him out, after which he's attacked and kills his friend. He flees to Mars where he kills a company employee who claims the hero is trapped inside his own memories and must take a pill to escape. The hero activates the Martian reactor and creates a breathable atmosphere. He finally destroys the elevator through the Earth and stops a massacre.

The heroine sings about her boring life in France, then visits her father who has invented an automatic wood-chopper. When her father is captured by a monstrous prince, she takes his place but is allowed to leave when a magic mirror shows him collapsing in the woods. Her father is left to die in the woods by the ex-soldier, but he is rescued by the local hermit. As the villagers storm the prince's castle, the heroine escapes house arrest with the help of a ceramic stowaway. In the final showdown, the ex-soldier fatally shoots the prince.

In Japan, some friends discuss a videotape. One's aunt locates the tape, watches it, and receives a phone call consisting solely of screeching. She shows the tape to her ex-husband, and together they investigate. They learn the tape was made by a horse breeder's adopted daughter, who was murdered. After her ex-boyfriend dies, she destroys the tape before realizing that the only way to lift the curse is to copy and share it.
